Lecture—Hellenistic Astrology: Rediscovering the Origins of Western Astrology

The system of astrology that the majority of western astrologers use today originated in the Mediterranean in the 1st century BC. This system represents a synthesis of the earlier Babylonian and Egyptian astrological traditions. It includes many of the techniques and concepts that modern astrologers still employ today, including the signs of the zodiac, the houses, aspects, planetary significations, transits, synastry, and electional astrology.

However, the system was not originally used solely in order to study the character or the psyche of the native, but rather it was designed and used in order to study the totality of an individual's life, which included both internal dispositions and concrete external events. This system has only recently been rediscovered and revived through the translation of ancient astrological texts in Greek and Latin. This lecture will provide an overview of what has been reconstructed of this ancient system so far, and how it can improve the accuracy of astrology in the modern world.

Seminar—Hellenistic Time-Lord Techniques: Zodiacal Releasing

In the Hellenistic tradition of astrology there were a collection of complex timing techniques called "time-lord" systems that were used to make predictions about an individual's future. One particularly powerful time-lord system called Zodiacal Releasing has recently been recovered from the work of the 2nd century astrologer Vettius Valens. In this workshop participants will learn how Zodiacal Releasing can be used to study different periods in a native's life with respect to their career, health or relationships, and how to make specific predictions about when some of the most important events in a person's life will occur in these areas

Chris Brennan is a practicing astrologer and researcher from Denver. He holds a degree from Kepler College, where he focused on cross-cultural comparisons between the astrological traditions, and he also spent two years studying at Project Hindsight. He is the former President of the Association for Young Astrologers, as well as the former Research Director of the National Council for Geocosmic Research. His forthcoming book is entitled Hellenistic Astrology: The Study of Fate. Find out more about Chris Brennan on his website:
